MICHAEL REECE

NEW WORK

Reece works in his newly built studio on Moody Mountain where he has lived for the past 15 years since moving to Maine in 1979. In this exhibit, both oils and watercolors portray his very personal and private landscape where the absence of modern conveniences, like electricity, keep Reece finely tuned to the elements of nature. Writer Edgar Allen Beem described Reece's style as being "a subset of painterly realism I recently heard called clean regionalism". Reece received his BFA from the University of North Carolina at Greensboro. Solo and group exhibitions in Maine include the Caldbeck Gallery, the Center for Maine Contemporary Art, Colby College Museum of Art, and the Farnsworth Art Museum.
