“Life, Still”

There was a line in a movie that has stuck with me: “Sometimes it helps to do one simple thing.” Painting is not simple, but the act of focusing on what is before you is settling in the way that was meant by that advice, never more so than in these chaotic times. Lately, people have commented that I must have patience to do my watercolors. I do, in many situations, have reserves of patience. But while I am painting, that is not what I am feeling. I enter a state of excitement, of gratitude for the gift before my eyes. My effort is a way to join the party, to apprehend what I find in that moment. No painting, and certainly no watercolor, proceeds as anticipated. That flexes me as a painter. I offer up these paintings as a way of saying let’s take time to appreciate the wonder of what Life still presents.
