Family difficulties during the last two years have been hard for me in different ways. Although I don't encompass these experiences directly in my work they are reflecting mood, tone, and absence.

Once bugs have died and lost the spark of life I try to honor their beauty with careful rendering to give them a new life through my painting.

Museum surroundings are described by floors, metal guard rails, light and shadows without the great art being displayed. Everything is minimally arranged but empty with the lines of explanations and communication but not in person.

Plants, food, furniture and houses are other objects of interest for me.
