WHAT I SAW

My good friend and I take walks together, frequently interrupting our conversation, to say "Look at that...."

It enhances my experience to share in what caught her notice. When a scene hits my eye, it's like Nature is saying, "Look at this". I can seek to understand and share in it fully through painting and passing it along.

It always helps to be in wild places.

I remember a time of grieving, when I wandered to a river and sat among the sedges. The sorrow gradually dripped and drained into the current, mixing into the great flow of vast time. Somehow, after receiving a glimpse into the relative brevity of my existence, my package of burden felt less.

It doesn't have to be a Grand Canyon, or even a river, to find this perspective. A bay is always nice. The drift of snow, the curl of a petal, or a bird's nest will do.
