Beech Hill, Ragged Mountain, Weaskeag Marsh, and Rockland Harbor, are subjects I repeatedly visited and painted from observation in my large collection of sketchbooks over the past three years. The subjects gave me visual nourishment and a kind of pulse that helped move me forward with my ideas. Arthur Dove referred to critical subjects like this as “breeder ideas” which he said were rare subjects that come along that feed your creative impulses. My sketchbook paintings were my “breeder” subjects that deepened my aesthetic sensibility as a painter and understanding of the natural world.
