The curator's role offers the opportunity to view the world through other's eyes. While at first glance, it might appear that there are more differences than similarities, all five painters are prompted by responses to the natural and human impacted world around us. Each of them have different visions, varying artistic concerns and varying approaches to working with watercolor. I tried to select work that is representative of the artists' current investigations, while making cohesive our connections. Among the things we share, is a commitment to working with a medium that never relinquishes full control, but can collaborate to present its gifts.

The most difficult part of the process for me was the space limitation. There is more to be seen at another time.
